The court FINDS that Counts 1, 6, 16 and 17 of Case No. C 90-07-34123 occurred after November 1, 1989, and that Counts 1 and 6 occurred on different dates.

The court FINDS that the defendant falls into Crime Category "H" based upon defendant's criminal history, as sworn to by the defendant on the criminal history form.

The court FINDS re: C 90-07-34123 that the following facts support the imposition of consecutive sentences under ORS 137.122 and ORS 137.123:

1. That the defendant's sexual activities with the victim in Case No. C 90-07-34123 did not occur on the same date and were not part of a continuous and uninterrupted course of conduct, but instead occurred over a substantial period of time, approximately one year, and this demonstrates the defendant's willingness to commit multiple and separate crimes against this victim;

2. That each act of sodomy against this victim caused additional harm to the victim;

3. That the photographing of this victim, in addition to the sexual acts against him, represent the defendant's willingness to commit a different crime against this victim, and represents a different potential for loss, harm or injury to this victim; it is not merely an incidental violation of a separate statutory provision.

Pursuant to OAR 253-08-002, upward departure sentences are based upon the following facts found by the court:

1. The defendant knew, or had reason to know, of this victim's particular vulnerability, to-wit: the victim was placed in the defendant's care by the Children Services Division of the State of Oregon for [REDACTED], and was in need of a stable and secure home environment to help alleviate problems he was having due to his youth and his unstable home life and personal history. This vulnerability increased the harm or threat of harm from the defendant's conduct.

2. The defendant has engaged in another, completely separate, sexual assault, also repetitive in nature, against an eleven year old female child in the State of New York in the year 1965. This conduct is not accurately reflected in the defendant's criminal history since he ultimately was allowed to plead guilty to the crimes in New York of "Sodomy as a Misdemeanor" and "Endangering the Life or Health of a Child", also a misdemeanor. The crime of Sodomy as Misdemeanor as it existed then in New York involved consensual sodomy between two persons; it had no element concerning the age of the victim and is thus not a crime at all for Oregon criminal history calculation. Further, the "Endangering" conviction fails to reflect the sexual nature of the defendant's conduct against that child victim. Moreover, the defendant's sworn affidavit concerning these crimes shows that he committed what in Oregon would be the crimes of Sexual Abuse in the First Degree by touching the 11 year old child's breasts and vaginal area on multiple occasions, and that he committed oral sodomy upon her on multiple occasions by putting his mouth on her vagina and having her put her mouth on his penis. Thus, the only conviction for these acts that can be used for Oregon Criminal History, that of "Endangering the Life or Health of a Child," a misdemeanor, does not accurately reflect the seriousness of the conduct that led to the conviction. A copy of the defendant's criminal conviction, the relevant statutes, the police reports, his affidavit and that of the child's in this 1965 case are attached to the plea and sentencing contract accepted by this court, and are incorporated by reference for purposes of this sentencing record.

3. That these convictions involve a violation of public trust in that the defendant was given responsibility for this child as a foster parent by the Children's Services Division of the State of Oregon, and the offenses against this boy occurred during the pendency of that relationship.

4. That this sentencing involves multiple victims in that the defendant also committed the crimes of Sexual Abuse in the Second Degree against the victim in Case No. C 90-08-34412. This fact that the defendant acted upon more than one victim is not captured in a consecutive sentence.

The court hereby FINDS by clear and convincing evidence, pursuant to ORS 426.675, that defendant is a sexually dangerous offender.

CSD initiates foster case reviews

□ The agency has moved a few children as a result of the plan, but no major errors have been discovered

By GORDON OLIVER
of The Oregonian staff

The Portland office of the Children's Services Division will routinely review foster placements every four months as part of its strategy to make sure children in state custody are living in homes that meet their needs, CSD Regional Administrator David Fuks said Monday.

In a case review now under way, Fuks said he had found "a number of cases" where children are not in the right settings.

Most commonly, he said, children have been in foster care too long because there aren't enough residential treatment centers or are living with relatives who may not be suitable foster parents. Also, the agency is finding that some children have such severe problems that it has no good places to send them, he said.

Fuks gave no specific numbers and said the agency had not finished its current case review. Fuks oversees CSD's Multnomah and Clackamas County branch offices.

The agency is reacting to the criticism that followed the disclosure two weeks ago that a Portland boy under CSD's custody had spent more than a year in the foster home of a known sex offender. Workers in CSD's Multnomah County branch left the 13-year-old boy in the care of Richard Herbert Smith for eight months after learning Smith had molested an 11-year-old girl 25 years ago in New York.

Smith now faces 21 counts of sex abuse in Multnomah County. He has pleaded not guilty.

After the Smith case became public, Fuks asked caseworkers to surrender files of any cases where they were worried about the children in state custody. Foster care workers in the Multnomah County branch turned in 54 cases, and Fuks said he had received cases from other departments within the branch and the Clackamas County branch.

The agency already has moved a few children as a result of the case review, Fuks said. But he said he has not discovered major errors of the kind that came to light in the Smith case.

"There has been nothing where we've fallen out of our chairs and said, 'Oh, my God, here's another one,'" he said.

Fuks said he would work on increasing supervision of casework, starting with the routine reviews every four months. He said he would not personally review difficult cases but would insist on reviews by branch managers.

Please turn to
CSD, Page B5

CSD: System not adequate

"I will expect a report every four months," he said.

Fuks said he had thought the review system was adequate in the past, but the Smith case taught him otherwise.

"It was happening on an as-needed basis," he said. "My expectation was that it was happening adequately. This case shows me that it wasn't."

Last week, the agency reassigned six workers to investigate 22 child-abuse claims that needed immediate attention. Fuks said those workers can help on the foster care cases, but he said he didn't know what to do about the shortage of suitable treatment centers and foster homes.

"We're going to continue screaming loud and raise our concerns," he said. "We have to point out the problems and take them up the line more frequently."

Foster parent's sex-crime conviction known early

Officials say Richard Herbert Smith's history was noted years ago by the CSD's Tillamook County office

By GORDON OLIVER
of The Oregonian staff

Children's Services Division officials in Tillamook County knew that Richard Herbert Smith, a Portland man accused of sexually abusing his teen-age foster son, was a convicted child molester even before CSD workers in Multnomah County made him a foster parent.

But Multnomah County CSD workers didn't learn about Smith's criminal history until November, seven months after the state agency placed a teen-age foster child in his home.

Also, officials said Friday that the agency had taken custody of Smith's son and stepson while the family was living in Tillamook County in the 1980s.

That information was available in the agency's computer system, but it was unclear whether Multnomah County workers had fully investigated the Smith family background before certifying him as a foster parent in May 1989.

In the case of the foster son, Smith, 52, was indicted Wednesday in Multnomah County Circuit Court on 21 counts of sexual abuse, sodomy and photographing a child in a sexually explicit display. He pleaded innocent to the charges. The foster son, who had been arrested on a juvenile charge last week, is lodged in the Donald E. Long home.

Smith had been convicted of molesting a child in New York state in 1966, according to CSD officials.

Multnomah County workers didn't remove the foster son from Smith's home after learning of that conviction, even though five CSD workers agreed in February that the boy should be removed.

The Children's Services Division has launched both internal and outside investigations into the affair.

In other developments, state Sen. Lenn Hannon, R-Roseburg, said he would propose legislation to intensify background investigations of foster parents. Hannon said he favored mandatory nationwide background investigations of potential foster and adoptive parents, similar to those now required for child-care employees.

State law prohibits nationwide criminal background checks of potential foster or adoptive parents. Hannon said the state might need to impose a fee on foster homes to help pay for the criminal background checks.

Also, state Sen. Bill McCoy, D-Portland, said he would call a special meeting of Senate Interim Committee on Human Resources to investigate whether children were at risk while under CSD's care. He said he might ask the Legislative Emergency Board for money to help the agency.

CSD: Computer file closed

The Multnomah County case file on Smith first refers to his New York crime in notes about a November conversation between workers in the Multnomah and Tillamook offices, said Alice Galloway, an agency spokeswoman. She said she didn't know who had initiated the conversation or how the subject of Smith's past had come up.

The file shows that Smith admitted the crime to a Multnomah County worker in December, Galloway said.

Smith apparently lived in Tillamook County for about 20 years before moving to Portland a few years ago, Galloway said. The agency's computer system has entries about Smith dating to 1981, she said.

However, the computer file on Smith had been closed by the time he applied in May 1989 to become a Multnomah County foster parent, Galloway said. Since both his son and his stepson are now adults, the file may have been closed when the children reached age 18, said Karen Sheppard, spokeswoman for the agency's Multnomah County branch.

The CSD officials would not disclose why the boys had been taken from Smith's home or for how long.

Foster father faces charges

The Oregonian 7-18-90

□ The child abuse case, only the latest in a series, prompts an investigation of how CSD places its clients

By GORDON OLIVER
and FRED LEESON
of The Oregonian staff

A Portland foster parent will be charged Wednesday with a range of sexual abuses of a boy placed in his care by the state Children's Services Division.

Authorities allege the abuse continued eight months after the man told CSD officials he had been convicted of molesting a child in 1965, and five months after agency officials agreed the child should be removed from his care.

The case is the latest in a series of cases in which children placed by the Children's Services Division were victimized by their foster parents. It has spurred an investigation into the way the agency places its clients.

Richard Herbert Smith, 52, was arrested Monday on accusations involving 21 sexually related crimes. The accusations involve a boy who had been placed in his care by the Children's Services Division in May 1989. The boy, now 14, ran away from the man's home last week.

Smith told division workers in November that he had been convicted of sexual abuse of a child in New York in 1965. CSD officials admitted Tuesday. The boy stayed with Smith even after five division employees agreed in February that he should be placed elsewhere, said David Fuks, the division's regional administrator.

"It appears that serious mistakes were made in terms of judgment with this case," Fuks said. "The agency should have removed the child in a much more speedy man-

CSD, Page A9

CSD: Agency set to conduct two investigations of case

The boy told Portland police about the alleged sexual abuse last Thursday after he was picked up on a juvenile delinquency charge, Fuks said.

Fuks said the agency would launch a pair of investigations of its handling of the case. The Multnomah County CSD office will conduct an internal investigation, and the agency's statewide office will appoint a committee of employees and independent experts for an outside review, Fuks said.

Fuks said he expected to hold people accountable for the decisions they made in the case. Discipline against employees involved in decisions could range from written reprimands to firings, he said.

The boy is staying in the Donald E. Long home, Fuks said.

Smith has been indicted by a Multnomah County grand jury with 11 counts of second-degree sodomy, four counts of second-degree sexual abuse and six counts of photographing a child in a display of sexually explicit conduct.

The youth and Detective Thomas Jacobs of the Portland Police Bureau were listed as the only witnesses to appear before the grand jury.

Smith is being held at the Justice Center jail. Bail is set at $136,500. He is scheduled to be charged Wednesday morning in a courtroom at the Justice Center.

The indictment charges that the crimes occurred between May 1989 and May 1990. Specific dates for the alleged sexual acts are not listed.

Second-degree sodomy is defined as deviate sexual intercourse with a victim who is younger than 14. Second-degree sexual abuse is defined as subjecting a person to sexual contact when the victim is younger than 18.

None of the accusations alleges that Smith used force against the youth.

Charges of using a child in a display of sexually explicit conduct are Class A felonies under state law. The sodomy counts are Class B misdemeanors, and the sex abuse counts are Class A misdemeanors.

The boy first came into the care of the Children's Services Division when he was 7 and was in and out of CSD custody after that, said Karen Sheppard, spokeswoman for the agency's Multnomah County office.

The boy came into state care because of emotional and behavioral problems, she said.

He was returned to his mother in September 1988 but returned to state custody seven months later, after his mother was arrested for operating a methamphetamine laboratory, Sheppard said.

The boy asked to be placed with Smith after he became friends with the man's son, Fuks said. The agency accepted Smith, who is divorced, as a foster parent under a special certification review process generally used to place children in homes of friends and relatives. About half of the foster homes in Multnomah County are homes approved under the special certification.

Smith told the agency in initial interviews that he had no criminal record, and the agency found none in a background check, Sheppard said. But the agency's criminal checks look for records only within the state of Oregon, noted Alice Galloway, spokeswoman for the agency's central office.

Fuks said he was trying to find out why the boy wasn't immediately removed from Smith's home after the man said he had been convicted of sexual abuse in 1965. He said Smith's statement was one of many "red flags" that raised questions but were not pursued.

Fuks said he thinks a CSD worker was trying to gather more information about Smith between November and February of this year. In February, the caseworker assigned to the case met with a CSD foster home certifier, two supervisors, and an acting program manager to discuss the case, he said. The group decided that the boy should be removed from Smith's home. They also thought Smith should lose his certification as a foster parent, Fuks said.

"We made a decision that the child should be removed, and then I think the case got caught up in bureaucratic red tape," he said.

Several other CSD placements this year have come back to haunt the state agency this year:

• In January, CSD removed a 7-year-old boy from the Salem home of Andrew and Diana Mae Kerp after the boy suffered second-degree burns and blisters on his legs and buttocks. The couple, who planned to adopt the boy, were accused of ordering him to stand close to a fireplace as a disciplinary measure while he was naked from the waist down. Both parents recently admitted to criminal mistreatment charges and await sentencing.

• In February, an Aurora foster father died of a heart attack while allegedly trying to sexually assault a teen-age foster daughter. Two caseworkers said the man, Robert Nelson, 49, was immature and said they had reported feeling uneasy about him before his death.

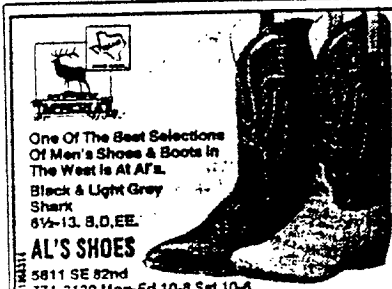

• In April, the former director of the Children's Farm Home, an independent treatment center in Corvallis, was arrested on sexual abuse charges. Grand jury indictments accuse William Henry Dufort, a longtime counselor and administrator, of 43 counts of sodomy and sexual abuse for acts allegedly committed against 10 young residents over the previous two years. Most youths at the home are referred there by CSD.

• And in June, a Washington County couple were charged with murder by abuse in the death of a 2-year-old girl placed in their home by CSD for adoption. It's the first time such charges have been brought in Oregon. The girl, Katie Gonzalez-Butterfield, also known as Felina Dillon, died Jan. 11. An attorney for the couple, Bruce L. Butterfield and Sarita J. Gonzalez, maintained that the child died of natural causes related to being a cocaine-addicted baby, not of head injuries.

Galloway said the case involving Smith would raise questions about the CSD's performance. "We're very disturbed by this case," she said. "It's an extremely serious case."

Fuks, who said he was grieving over the incident, defended the agency's ability to protect most children under its care.

"This agency is capable of doing a good job and every day is doing a good job with many, many children," he said. "But this is an agency run by human beings, and sometimes human beings make errors."
